Warren represents both public and private sector employers with experience in employment, labour, human rights, and commercial litigation. Warren advises clients on a variety of issues with a focus on dispute resolution, either in court or by alternative dispute resolutions processes. Warren has appeared before the Provincial Court of British Columbia and the Provincial Court of Alberta. Warren also has experience conducting workplace investigations and preparing investigation reports.

Warren's true passion is finding new and innovative solutions to complex problems and prides himself on providing practical, efficient, and actionable advice tailored to the particular business needs of his clients. In addition, Warren strives to provide pro-active and up-to-date information to his clients to prevent disputes, liability, or reputational damage.

Warren was called to the Alberta Bar in October 2018, where he practised commercial litigation at a large international firm and worked as in-house counsel for one of Canada's largest employers. During law school, Warren volunteered for the Law Students Legal Advice Program, Prisoners' Legal Services, and the John Howard Society. Warren also took part in numerous clinical courses, including the Judicial Externship Program and the Innocence Project.
